According to those who consider emotions to be multi-componential reactions to the environment (e.g., Gross, 1998), affect is an umbrella word to describe anything related to emotions or mood. It's definition isn't as specific as the one above. On the other hand, "feelings" has no specific definition. It's a vague term that most emotion theorists don't use because it could refer to almost anything (e.g., interoception, nociception, exteroception like touch).
